Your comments:	Why on earth would the local authority contemplate allowing, or working towards, the extraction of fossil fuels? Has it read the latest report on climate change from international authorities with all the evidence anyone would ever need of the dangers to the planet being caused by climate change with clear links to the use of fossil fuels? Is there any common sense or good judgment in this local authority? Why should it be necessary to say any more. If the local authority permits this activity to the harm of population at large very serious questions need to be asked, and addressed, about the exercise of its duty of care to the public. The UK government seems to be simultaneously claiming to recognise the dangers of climate change for political gain at the forthcoming COP meeting while at the same time allowing, even encouraging, coal mining. I hope at local level we will set a better example. There is no justification under any circumstances for permitting this. It's time to draw a line under this activity once and for all and start using public resources for good.
